

0:00:00

I think that this is the crucial question of the whole higher education process, because we are paying a lot of attention to the new technologies, new technologies supporting teaching and learning processes and also for students. But what I think is very important is to think about the faculty and the usefulness of the faculties in different contexts. I mean it's not, it cannot be the same the faculty attending or giving lectures at the master level, of course, at the doctoral level. So we need to think the added value of the human factor, as I used to say, for higher education in the different levels and also in the different fields, not the same for humanities or for STEM, of biology, in bachelor, biology, in master or business administration or whatever. So we need to ensure that the faculty is essential for the teaching and learning processes, no matter how obvious it seems, because it's necessary to highlight it and to pay a lot of attention to this to this issue for the future.

0:01:30

you